

First Ever Blog

Contributed by Tanya Merriman
Tuesday, 29 August 2006
Last Updated Tuesday, 29 August 2006

This has been a long haul. Hell actually. A never ending battle of sorting information and learning. Don't get me wrong. I love science, let me rephrase that, I used to love sciece. I used to preach that "science is cool" to the kids. I hate science. And in our house the word "hate" isn't allowed. You can dislike someone or something but you do not hate anything. I hate science and I hate whoever is doing this and giving the ok for them to do it. God and I will discuss it when I get there.

There are so many uncertainties that lie with these technologies. It's confusing, I believe when so many people are being used as experiments in so many different ways and when they come together knowing that their one common bond is being experimented on they keep trying to find similarities it creates more confusion. Me, I'm open to almost all of them. Once you have heard your thoughts repeated to you in your own mind as you think them. And your words read to you as you type them, just for starters, you tend to be open minded to many different possibilities.

Welcome to my world.....